In regards to the application for a new livestock market charter submitted by Carter and Remington:

I do not see the need for another saleyard in this region. Saleyards are a business that also provide a service and the service area in this region is adequately covered.

With more and more cattle being marketed through internet, video and directly through classifieds or social media, it is already a diluted marketplace.

Can a new facility be built to satisfy all federal and state guidelines for animal health guidelines rules and restrictions. And can a new saleyard seek enough financing to operate under P & S guidelines and rules after the building of a new facility?

I do reiterate that this region's service area is adequately covered and I would protest the granting of a new charter.
